GROUSE & COMPANY

BRITISH JOINERY & INTERIORS

Website builder brief

What Grouse is

Grouse & Company is being built as a premium British joinery and interiors brand for characterful countryside homes. We work with homeowners, interior designers, architects and builders to create purposeful fitted furniture and carefully resolved interiors. We bring design guidance, technical development and dependable delivery to both direct commissions and professionally led projects. Every decision should serve the way the client lives while respecting the proportions, materials and character of the building.

Our ambition is to become a recognised, quintessentially British business with a distinctive point of view and a reputation earned through happy clients. Brands such as Barbour, Loake and E.J. Churchill represent the kind of lasting identity we admire: useful craftsmanship, country-life relevance, knowledgeable service and consistent presentation. This is an ambition for Grouse's character and reputation.

Who we are for

We serve four client groups within the premium residential market. Each can commission Grouse directly; professional clients are an important part of the business in their own right.

Homeowners: guidance on layout, materials and details, with a clear route from first ideas to installation. Often owners or new buyers of country houses, farmhouses, village homes and period properties.

Interior designers: a collaborative joinery partner who respects their creative direction, develops buildable details and coordinates samples, manufacture and installation.

Architects: technically resolved joinery, accurate drawings, clear specification and careful integration with the building and wider design team.

Builders and main contractors: dependable delivery of defined joinery and interior finishing packages, with clear scope, coordinated programmes, site readiness and quality control.

Our starting focus is South Oxfordshire, with selected projects across Oxfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, the Chilterns and potentially the Cotswolds.

Where the business is going

We are building the joinery arm first: a focused offer, dependable delivery and strong portfolio pieces to make people aware of who we are. Featuring in countryside homes i.e Country Living, Country & Home, Period Living. Over time, a second arm will manage smaller interior renovation projects as principal contractor. Joinery can anchor those projects and managed projects can create further joinery commissions. An in-house interior designer is a later ambition. The website should accommodate this growth while advertising only services we can deliver now.

The story behind the name

I began at Symm & Company in 2009, a very reputable heritage construction company dating back to 1815. I worked on this business plan in my office illuminated by the lights of the ski run from Grouse Mountain in Vancouver, the name grouse also represents a traditional game bird which matches my countryside theme. I was searching for a name that wasn't one of my own, so Grouse combined with "& Company" is a good mix of a nod to where my career began and where the idea for the business developed from.

Our offer and the Grouse experience

Core positioning

A coordinated period-home joinery package from feasibility through aftercare, for homeowners and professional teams. Secondary work includes technical joinery development, heritage-sensitive interior finishing, follow-on rooms and aftercare.

Lead with five systems across the website, portfolio and Instagram. The percentages guide the rolling marketing mix, not sales forecasts or the proportion of every webpage.

Priority system	Emphasis	Client benefit
Wardrobes	40%	Considered storage and dressing spaces.
Media units	20%	Technology integrated quietly into the room.
Alcoves	15%	Useful cabinetry that fits existing architecture.
Boot rooms	15%	Practical spaces for everyday country life.
Panelling	10%	Proportion, texture and architectural detail.

Kitchens, pantries, utilities, studies, home libraries and architectural joinery belong within the wider offer where our capability and portfolio support them. The ideal project values guidance, allows scope to be resolved before production and funds the real design and management effort.

THE GROUSE STANDARDS: guidance with room for individuality

We begin with the home, the client's desired look and the practical brief. Grouse Standards curate compatible materials, hardware, mouldings, construction details and finishes so clients can make fewer, better decisions. These are premium choices selected for appearance, suitability and durability. Fully Bespoke remains available for projects requiring wider design freedom; it is not a separate level of quality.

The problem we solve

Owners and project teams need to modernise complicated homes sensitively, specify appropriate details and coordinate delivery. Decision overload, unclear costs, fragmented responsibility and unresolved designs can undermine an otherwise attractive scheme. Older buildings add irregular dimensions, access constraints and disruption risks.

We make designs technically buildable, give the client one accountable lead for our agreed joinery package, reduce uncertainty through clear communication, coordinate design through manufacture and installation and deliver modern function without erasing character. Grouse Standards reduce unnecessary choices and repeated invention while preserving flexibility where it improves the outcome.

Our production and delivery model

Grouse uses The Workshop, co-owned by Adam and Steve from Steven Andrews Bespoke, as its shared technical and production resource, alongside approved specialists where needed. Grouse controls its client relationship, scope, specification, quality oversight, installation coordination and aftercare. Explain the capability simply; internal ownership arrangements need not dominate the public website.

How Grouse stands out

We should demonstrate these six strengths through real work and a defined service. “Quality”, “craftsmanship” and “attention to detail” become credible when the website shows how we achieve them.

1. Period-home intelligence

Show our understanding of Georgian proportion, Victorian detail, Edwardian influences, Arts and Crafts and Cotswold character through drawings, material choices and completed projects. Explain why a detail suits the actual building. Respect original fabric and distinguish informed contemporary interpretation from historical restoration.

2. Design-for-manufacture expertise

Before production, confirm dimensions, hardware, construction, finishes, tolerances, service routes, access, installation sequence and responsibility for adjacent trades. Show approved drawings, sample sign-offs and production-ready details as evidence of “resolve before build”.

3. Installation-led design

Design for the real site: uneven walls, out-of-square rooms, floor and ceiling levels, skirting, architraves, fixing points, historic fabric, appliance ventilation, delivery access and future maintenance. Case studies should explain a real constraint and how our survey, detailing or installation method resolved it.

4. Curated British detail

Develop a trusted library of hardware, paints, timber, stone, lighting, decorative accessories and traditional fittings. Armac Martin is a supplier reference to explore, not an implied partnership. The value is knowing which combinations suit the property. Demonstrate “simplify the choices” with sample boards and a defined upgrade menu. Labelled samples, specification cards and a restrained wax seal make the care tangible.

5. Clear project control

Provide a defined process, clear assumptions, decision deadlines, stage approvals, written progress and manufacturing updates, approved changes, installation readiness checks and a proper handover. Show “considered delivery” through site protection, installation packs, progress records and snag closure. Professional clients need clear coordination with their own teams and programme.

6. Useful aftercare

Provide a care booklet, finish schedule, hardware information, approved cleaning guidance, paint and stain references, applicable warranty details, snagging process and future alteration notes. Translate the Loake-inspired care experience into practical support that helps clients maintain and adapt their joinery.

The evidence the website should carry

Five message pillars: simplify the choices; respect the home; resolve before build; considered delivery; technical depth. Pair each with proof: curated samples, before-and-after details, approved CAD, installation records and technically demanding case studies. Name software such as Microvellum only where it helps substantiate the capability. Publish service promises we can consistently fulfil.

Editorial themes

Cover Georgian, Victorian and Edwardian details; appropriate period joinery; repair versus replacement; modernising without losing character; surveying irregular buildings; design-for-manufacture; installation; hardware and finishes; renovation mistakes; communication and change control; before-and-after projects; and real site problems we have resolved. Credit collaborators and show benefits for homeowners, designers, architects and builders.

Visual identity and references

The look we want

A warm, restrained British country-house aesthetic with the clarity of a well-run design business. Generous space, large room photographs, close material details and short editorial passages should carry the site. Use natural light, painted timber, stained oak, fine mouldings and aged hardware. Keep movement subtle and mobile layouts simple. I'm happy with using AI rendered images for now.

Countryside tones so lots of dark olives, greens, browns, with autumnal leaf colours/ antique brass text.

Element	Direction
Brand name	GROUSE & COMPANY in Georgia at the top. Use approved logo artwork when supplied.
Headings	Libre Baskerville Regular, not bold. In the hero descriptor italicise only "British".
Body and navigation	Poppins. Source Sans 3 is the alternative if needed; use one body family consistently.
Palette	Deep olive #15190A; warm ivory #F7F1ED; pale stone #EDE7E2 Antique brass #a98752. These are working values drawn from the proposal, to confirm in final brand assets.
Colour use	Ivory reading surfaces with light text and selected olive sections. Oak and restrained brass details bring warmth. Check readable contrast.

The seven website references

The following are the sites we like and the suggested lessons for Grouse. Use their presentation principles as inspiration while creating our own identity, words and imagery.

Reference	What to take forward
Barr Build barrbuild.co.uk/services/kitchens-joinery	The relationship between cabinetry, whole-property projects and coordinated specialist delivery.
Steven Andrews Bespoke stevenandrewsbespoke.com	Project-led presentation, a visible founder and an approachable route into a bespoke commission.
Kitchen Architecture kitchenarchitecture.co.uk	Sell the experience of living in the space and the value of design beyond individual cupboards.
Plain English plainenglishdesign.co.uk	British interior character, proportion and detail; useful links between rooms, colours and craftsmanship.
Humphrey Munson humphreymunson.co.uk	A coherent world of cabinetry across kitchens and other rooms, supported by projects and material content.
English & Wood englishandwood.co.uk	Country-home warmth and practical supporting rooms, including boot rooms, pantries and panelling.

Doig doigfurniture.com	Clear process, technically resolved bespoke work and confidence for architects, designers and contractors.

References beyond interiors

Barbour: a recognisable countryside identity. Loake: material detail, craftsmanship and useful care guidance. E.J. Churchill: specialist knowledge and attentive country-life service. Translate these qualities into Grouse's behaviour and presentation without adopting another brand's logos, claims or visual identity.

Language to use consistently

Replace "Joinery services" with "Bespoke countryside interiors" and "Carpentry" with "Design-led interior joinery" in lead messaging across the website, leaflets, Instagram bio and proposal headers. Retain clear service names such as wardrobes and panelling. Write with warmth, precision and quiet confidence; show what makes the work good instead of repeating "luxury", "timeless" or "unrivalled".

The website we need

Build a focused portfolio and enquiry website. Within the first screen, visitors should understand what we do, the homes we serve and how to start a conversation. The result should attract suitable projects and make homeowners, interior designers, architects and builders feel directly addressed.

British Joinery & Interiors

We work with homeowners, interior designers, architects and builders to create thoughtful fitted furniture and interior joinery for characterful homes.

Location: Based in Oxfordshire. Primary action: Tell us about your project. Secondary action: Explore our work. Supporting brand line: Modern living, rooted in character.

Homepage sequence

Strong room image and clear introduction → selected real projects → the five core systems → Grouse Standards and our approach → founder and client proof → a useful British Interior article → project enquiry. Show finished work prominently, with details and process images supporting it.

Page	Purpose and required content
Home	Clear positioning, location, selected work and direct routes into projects and enquiries.
Bespoke Interiors	The five systems plus relevant wider rooms. Explain practical benefits, design possibilities and links to real work.
Our Work	Image-led case studies: the commissioning client, property context, our exact role, collaborators, design decisions, materials and result.
Our Approach	Grouse Standards, Fully Bespoke and project stages. Include a clear professional-client section covering design collaboration, technical development and defined delivery packages.
About	The founder's relevant experience, name origin, values and ambition. Keep the story personal and concise.
The British Interior	An editable guide to period details, appropriate joinery and modern country living. Start with a few useful articles.

Start a Project	A short enquiry form, direct contact details, coverage and an explanation of what happens next.

The British Interior: the editorial idea

Explain what British interiors mean to Grouse: a respect for proportion, useful rooms, enduring materials and the layers that give a house character. Show how new joinery can belong in an older home while meeting present-day needs.

Commission a simple guide to panelling and detailing by period, including Georgian, Regency, Victorian, Edwardian and Arts and Crafts examples. Each entry should show approximate dates, suitable property contexts, profiles and proportions, timber or paint finishes and colour suggestions. Clearly distinguish historical evidence from contemporary interpretation. A house's date alone does not determine the right scheme; existing fabric and later alterations matter. Verify historical claims before publication.

I want grouse to be the go to period property intelligence resource that also teaches everyday people about interior architecture and in keeping with the times instead of just loading rooms with cheap ikea units. Explaining the benefits of bespoke cabinetry, the way it commands a room and they way it feels when you use premium products.

Content, enquiries and build handover

Photography and proof

Use generous full-room views alongside close-ups of cockbeaded in-frame kitchen doors, stained solid oak, mouldings, fittings and careful junctions. Capture the lived purpose of a room as well as its finish. The olive brand palette should frame a varied portfolio, not dictate every client's colour scheme.

AI images and the existing mockups are concept references only and must be labelled accordingly. They cannot appear as completed Grouse projects. Use approved real photographs, accurate project credits and permission-cleared testimonials. Distinguish Adam's previous experience and collaborative work from commissions delivered by Grouse.

Enquiry and technical requirements

Capture name, email, postcode, project type and brief. Make phone, plans/photos, investment and timing optional. Offer homeowner, interior designer, architect and builder/main contractor routes. For professionals, request company, project stage, drawings and required support. Confirm submission and deliver enquiries to our inbox or CRM for human review.

Build for mobile first with readable type, accessible contrast, keyboard navigation, labelled fields and optimised images. Provide editable projects, services and articles; descriptive page titles and local search copy; privacy information and appropriate consent controls. Test form delivery, upload limits, links and layouts before launch. Give us ownership of the domain, site accounts, content and enquiry data, plus clear hosting costs and editing instructions.

Marketing the website supports

Prioritise referrals, designer and architect relationships, Instagram and local search. Relationship development spans local studios and builders; digital discovery through Instagram, LinkedIn and Houzz; industry directories and events; and trusted neighbourhood recommendations. Provide clear routes for both homeowners and professional clients to discuss a commission or submit a project brief. Case studies should demonstrate collaboration and accurately identify our contracted role.

Content pillars: “What we promised vs what we delivered”; “Period property detail explained”; “Behind the scenes: how we prepare”. Proposed annual rhythm: Q1 wardrobes and storage; Q2 alcoves and media units; Q3 boot rooms and country routines; Q4 panelling and completed-project stories. Maintain the five-system mix across the year
